Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

NOTICE OF NEW DEPARTMENT

Hereafter Modern Philology will print, in addition to the longer articles constituting the bulk of each number, shorter articles and notes. Many valuable observations and discoveries remain unpublished for years merely because the proper statement of them requires only a page or even less. Some are buried in the footnotes of long articles with which they have little or no connection. The general good demands that discoveries should be published promptly and in such form as to be easily accessible. Modern Philology will try to do its part if those who have new information or new ideas will make them known to their fellow-students.

Our appeal for new subscribers has met with many prompt and cordial responses. There has been general recognition of the obligation resting upon each one of us—whether he himself has the time and opportunity for research or not—to help provide the channels through which the results of research can flow to us all. But we need more subscribers yet to enable us to carry out all our plans for enlarging the size and increasing the usefulness of Modern Philology. It is hoped that our present subscribers will aid us by words fitly spoken to those who ought to subscribe but do not.